(San Francisco / Washington DC, May 6, 2020) - One in four people in the United States has some form of disability. As the rate of disability rises across the nation, so does the need for broader research, legislation, and training. The Association of University Centers on Disabilities (AUCD), a preeminent organization located in Silver Spring, MD, is partnering with Flexability to embark on a national search for the organization's next Executive Director. Flexability, a social impact staffing and consulting firm, focuses on building equity, understanding, and profitability in the workplace through disability employment.

"Flexability is thrilled to partner with AUCD and its Search Committee to identify AUCD's next leader," said Nancy Geenen, Flexability CEO. "We are mindful of the organization's critical role in improving disability research and policy, its talented team, and our shared vision of greater disability inclusion. Flexability's approach to the search will be broad, inclusive, and committed to tapping into diverse communities. We are looking for a passionate leader, a skilled manager, and a creative strategist."

Centering inclusion and equity, the Executive Director will inherit an organization that is respected by peers, is financially stable, has a highly motivated and engaged staff, and has an experienced governing Board. The Executive Director will support and advance the growth, development, and visibility of AUCD and strengthen AUCD's financial position.
